This week, FEA President Sharon Manuel represented FEA during the overseas excessing process and the Worldwide Reassignment Program (WRP). Sharon's presence helped ensure that the process was conducted fairly, transparently, and in accordance with established procedures, while also elevating member concerns and questions throughout the process.

This year's overseas excessing and WRP cycle operated under a limited budget, which created additional challenges for affected educators. FEA remains committed to advocating for a stronger, more adequately funded program, and next year we will push for a larger budget to better support members navigating reassignment and placement overseas.

FEA will continue to show up, closely monitor these processes, and fight to protect members' rights and working conditions.

FEA and NEA Show Up for Federal Workers at PAWA Rally

Over 1 million federal workers lost their union rights under an Executive Order. On January 14, unions and allies came together to fight to get them back.

FEA and NEA staff showed up at the U.S. Capitol for the January 14 rally in support of the Protect America's Workforce Act (PAWA), a bipartisan bill that would restore union protections for federal workers and honor collective bargaining agreements.

PAWA has already passed the House with bipartisan support. The focus now is on pushing it through the Senate, and continued public pressure remains critical. Leaders from Congress, national unions, and local labor organizations stood united to demand action and protect collective bargaining rights for federal workers.

As discussions resume in the Senate about attaching PAWA to a must-pass bill, NEA has released an updated action alert for members. FEA members are encouraged to contact their Senators about this critical legislation that protects federal workers' rights nationwide.

Your voice matters, and collective action helps ensure this bill stays front and center for lawmakers.
